When to Use a Survey

[Outside of psychological science research]

Surveys are commonly used with key stakeholders, especially customers and employees:

- When identifying customer requirements or preferences.
- When assessing customer or employee satisfaction, such as identifying or prioritizing problems to address.
- When evaluating proposed changes.
- When assessing whether a change was successful.
- Periodically, to monitor changes in customer or employee satisfaction over time.